

LexisNexis Business Intelligence Solutions Goes International

To deliver greater value for customers, LexisNexis combines products, solutions and services into one integrated business

AMSTERDAM, 17 January 2012 – LexisNexis, a leading provider of content and technology solutions, today announced it will combine its business intelligence activities across Europe, the Middle East and Latin America to form LexisNexis International Business Intelligence solutions (LNI BIs). In response to increasing requests from customers to be served both locally and globally, this organisational change is designed to combine markets with similar characteristics and requirements and will operate under a common managing director and management structure.

LNI BIs will serve 2,850 customers, over 62 countries, with more than 200 employees, giving significant global reach.

For Rob Veneboer, former managing director of Benelux, Germany and Channels and recently appointed managing director of the integrated structure, the impact for existing and future clients will be positive. “Our customers and prospects will benefit from our consolidated portfolio,” said Veneboer. “This will ensure we can deliver the best possible services and products, building on our combined expertise and experience to innovate and deliver even stronger solutions for the future.”

Veneboer confirmed that day-to-day business is unlikely to change for customers. However, the consolidation of resources and expertise will open up further opportunities for providing clients with the highest quality service and solutions.

“This combined focus marks a new era for us, our teams and our customers,” said Veneboer. “With the integration of these countries into one unit, we are able to deliver world-class products and services to meet our clients’ needs.”
